Misses June and July, robed in azure, come nigh; With Augusta-March leads the young May; In soft zephyrs they sigh-dewy tears fill each eye, For they grieve that their father, the Old Year, must die, And his sons, for their weeds, tear the clouds from the sky, Which rebellious side-winds sweep away.

But the hoary old sage calmly looks on their rage, With bowed head is mustering his breath, With the gathering foe a last conflict to wage, Yet the odds are too great between youth and old age, for his treacherous sons with their sire now engage, December's shaft dooms him to death.

Lay him out by the wall, shroud him o'er with a pall. From his place in the ages he's passed; On his white flowing beard let the frost-gems now fall, And the snow's winding-sheet his dead body enthrall; bout we never so loudly he'll heed not our call, Though we cry with the tempest's strong blast.

[From Emory's Journal of Agriculture.] Don't Get Discouraged.

BY MRS. F. D GAGE. "Oh, George, don't get discouraged," said sweet Urrie Linton, as she stood by her husband's side, one bright moonlight evening. "I know the season has been hard, and we have had trial upon trial ; but we have had many blessings, too."

"I shou d like to know what you call blessings," said the moody husband, his head upon his hand, and his chair tilted back against the log cabin. "Here we have been toiling and moiling for the last year and a half, on this bleak, miserable prairie, not a hill in sight, and the winds sweeping us ten month him the year, like tornadoes. Last year I must have the ague, so that I could not tend my crops, and this year the spring frost must kill all my corn, and then the drouth spoiled all my wheat." "Oh, well, George, these things may never happen again."

"I know, that's the way you always reason. So you said last year, that luck would change, and kept saying, 'Don't get discouraged.' If it had'nt been for you, I'd have quit last fall, and gone back to old Oneida."

"And what would you have done there, George?"
"Done a darnd sight better than I'll ever do here, in this heathen country !" was the pettish and almost profane reply of the young farmer who had sought a home for himself and his wife on the prairies of Illinois, in the year 18-.

Carrie was hurt. A tear sprang to her eye, and a quicker throb to her heart; but she knew his mood might be changed, and she knew too, that were she to speak one desponding word, he would give up utterly, and insist upon returning again to the haunts of his childhood, where his situation would be that of u common laborer. So she checked the rising emotion, and again answered with a tone of cheerful encour-ment and mild reproof-"Oh, don't speak so, George. I know we have not been very successful, but then we are settling in a new country, and beginning a new life. We must struggle on and not give up. After a few years, our locust trees will break the wind, and the loss of one planting of corn or wheat, I hope will not prostrate us as it does now."

"But how am I ever to get where I can help myself? Corn spoiled, wheat blighted, and the cow lost in the prairies; the wolves have killed my sheep, and now my best cow must die. You may talk of blessings, but I don't, and I'm determined to sell out to the first white man that will take it, and then quit the country." " Is not this a blessing?" she asked, laying a crowing baby boy, the very image of his father, into his The father smiled faintly; his heart was really sad. The hardships, trials, and deprivations of a new

And is not Carrie a blessing?" she added, as she the warm kiss of affection upon his brow.

"Aye, and Carrie is a blessing," was his response of a lighter tone.

"And is not good health a blessing?" "Yes, I suppose so," said he, almost laughing.

" And is not this soft, cool, this mellow moonlight, and the star-spangled heavens, a blessing?" " Of course. "See our beautiful garden; how softly it sleeps in the moonlight. Did you not tell me to-day, that you never saw such beets and cabbage, such onions and squashes? and shall we not have potatoes for our-selves and our neighbor, if we should be blessed so as to have any?" "Why, Carrie," said he, taking the soft hand in | shelter of a tree, into which he would be compelled to

Let us skip over a score of years. Do you see that fine flourishing village, with a railroad track coursing through its very center? Do you see those fine brick school-houses with their belfries and clearsounding bells, calling together the hundreds of chil-dren, to teach them of the mysteries of science, and put into their hands that weapon of defence and power for the future—a good common school education?
Do you see you imposing building in the distance, with its massive walls and towering roof? That is a cried with desperate earnestness, "O, God, save my college. THESE MACHINES took the Gold Medal at the great Paris Exhibition in competition with all the machines of Europe and America, including "Wheeler & Wilson's" and "Grover & Baker's," and the French Government paid Singer & Co. 500,000 francs for the use of the patents. In addition to this, we have taken the First premium at seven State Fairs, and and it hardly needs the verdict of a Honolulu jury—where Sewing Machines are scarcely known—to determine its position as the best machine for all practical purposes in use. All who have used the different machines will say so, and none others are competent judges. Address.
